1. Explain with reference to the questions : $4 \times 2 = 8$
- (a) On some evenings, seated at his desk in the corner of the big empty shed, the postmaster too would call up memories of his own home, of his mother and his sister, of those for whom in his exile his heart was sad,-memories which were always haunting him, but which he could not talk about with the men of the factory, though he found himself naturally recalling them aloud in the presence of the simple little girl. And so it came about that the girl would allude to his people as mother, brother, and sister, as if she had known them all her life. In fact, she had a complete picture of each one of them painted in her little heart.

But then again others said there were some things which could not wait to be laid before a Council, but about which one had at once to decide whether to undertake them or not. But in order to decide that, one must know beforehand what was going to happen. It is only magicians who know that; and, therefore, in order to know the right time for every action, one must consult magicians.

- (b) At last Ratan would enter with puffed-out cheeks, vigourously blowing into a flame a live coal to light the tobacco. This would give the postmaster an opportunity of chatting with her. "Well", Ratan, 'perhaps he would begin, 'do you remember anything of your mother ?'. That was a fertile subject. Ratan partly remembered and partly forgot. Her father had been fonder of her than her mother : him she recollected more vividly. He used to come home in the evening after his work, and one or two evenings stood out more clearly than others. like pictures in her memory.
